History

The history of Migros is closely linked with its founder, Gottlieb Duttweiler. In 1925, he was the first to send mobile shops out on the road, selling six basic products at very low prices. His goal was to create a bridge from producer to customer. To this day, Migros has remained faithful to the visions of its founder, whose passion was always to balance economic, social and ecological dimensions.

Strategic business units

Whether you’re looking for bread, glasses or banking, Migros operates in a wide range of sectors.
Cooperative retailing

The ten regional cooperatives are the very foundation of Migros. They are independently managed, issue their own annual financial statements and control their own sales areas and staff in the core business: retailing under the Migros name. Their most important functions are the sale of merchandise and the purchasing of regional product ranges, while the Federation of Migros Cooperatives takes care of central services such as purchasing, logistics and IT. The executive bodies of a regional cooperative are all members (original ballot), the cooperative board, administration, management and auditors. The 111-member Assembly of Delegates is appointed from the ten cooperative committees and also includes an ad hoc representative from each of the ten managerial teams as well as an independent president.

Commerce

The Federation of Migros Cooperatives owns five market-leading companies. These include the discounter Denner, convenience specialist migrolino, and petrol station operator and oil supplier Migrol. With Digitec Galaxus, Migros also owns the largest e-commerce player in Switzerland, while Ex Libris is the country’s leading online bookseller.
Migros-Industry

Through its industrial companies, Migros Industry produces and distributes high-quality food, personal care and cleaning products in Switzerland and abroad. It is an integral component of Migros and has been a fundamental part of the Migros DNA since the company was founded by Gottlieb Duttweiler: More than 50% of the brands in Migros branch stores are own brands. In 2020, Migros Industry had sales of CHF 5.975 billion (+1.8%), despite the challenging market environment. The year was heavily affected by the coronavirus pandemic: Changed customer behaviour led to a sales increase of CHF 215 million in the Migros Group retail business. The closure of food operations during the lockdown and the ongoing restrictions led to a decline in sales of CHF 107 million in the large consumer business. With some 14,000 employees, including 524 apprentices in more than 30 professions, Migros is a major trainer and employer in Switzerland.
